‘Care and Competency’

Editor:

Just as I’m finishing my estate plan including a directive for my end of life care, I read your excellent but horrifying article on Dick and Judy Magneys’ cruel treatment (“Calculated Deception,” June 24) by the county’s misnamed Adult Protective Services Department. Not only has an appellate court pronounced APS’ actions “profoundly disturbing” but the County has paid $1 million to settle the resulting lawsuit. Just as disturbing is Humboldt County’s Public Guardian Office forcing Mr. Magney, when he was desperately ill, to testify alone before a judge, to defend his last wishes for his care. Topping it off is the possible suspension of two attorneys’ licenses to practice law for their conduct in representing Humboldt County and the agencies involved.

Mr. Magney’s advance care directive, in part, states, “I want to live my life with dignity and for my loved ones to have pleasant memories of my final days.” My own advance care directive will express a very similar wish. But unless there’s a thorough shakeup in the county departments involved, as well as in the Board of Supervisors who set the standard for justice, care and competence in county governance, I wonder if I will have to move to a different county to assure my end of life wishes are granted.

Editor:

Ferndale continues to reveal itself as a hotspot for bigotry in Humboldt County and it must end. This week St. Mark’s Evangelical Lutheran Church displayed on its marquee, “Hurt by LGBT culture? Healing here” due to the occurrence of Pride Month in the United States.

After several instances over the years, this display of homophobia indicates that there is more than just a racism problem in Ferndale, but a larger issue of general bigotry towards minority groups. At the end of the day, people are more inclined to spend their money and live in an environment in which bigotry is not present than an environment in which it is. If this behavior continues, it is just going to hurt the small businesses that rely upon non-residents contributing to Ferndale’s overall economy. It will eventually affect Ferndale Elementary and Ferndale High schools, for people will look to send their children to other schools that do not have bigotry present in the town in which they operate. People will eventually feel unsafe and move out of town due to the lack of response to instances of bigotry. The continued accumulation of bigoted instances in Ferndale is an economic

First Farmers’ Market After the Pandemic

After the great silence, we come to the church of blessing. On this sunny Sunday on the plaza, we stream onto the sidewalks quiet and contrite.
We listen to the wisdom of the farmers as they tell us of the past year—how much fell sick and died—how much had to be pruned back and burned, if there was to be a harvest again. How long has it been since we have seen so much bounty. Children dance around us, laughing, but we speak in whispers. One by one,
we arrive at the tables, take off our masks,
and receive the sacraments:
the snapdragons,
sage sticks,
homemade tamales,
BBQed oysters,
hot dogs,
and fresh baked bread.
We reach out our hands, stunned by the overflow of cacti and sunflowers, infused oils and artichokes,
homemade tamales and sun ripened peaches.
We bow our heads before the woman who offers us local mead, receive the communion of goat cheese on a cracker with a dollop of jalapeno jelly, forgiving us all of the ways we failed ourselves and one another. And then, as if reborn, we find ourselves swept up in the glory of all that is offered, we hug and offer back our own blessing of laughter and tears, this unspoken overflowing of joy after so much wandering alone in the desert.

issue, and it is long past due that leaders in the community realize this.

It is ultimately the Ferndale City Council's responsibility to address this bigotry head-on. Therefore, I am calling on Mayor Don Hidley, Vice Mayor Stephen Avis, Councilmember Robin Smith, Councilmember Leonard Lund and Councilmember Phillip Ostler to not only release a statement condemning bigotry in Ferndale but to come up with comprehensive policies to effectively address bigotry in Ferndale because whatever they are doing now is not working. If we want Ferndale to have a brighter future, then it must not be left up to community members to address these issues.

'Respect'

Navigating the world as an engineer over the last 24 years has been an interesting journey for me. As a young professional, I spent time keeping quiet. I questioned the value of my input when surrounded by men. County staff recently discounted my "expert" opinion in the June 21 Planning Department staff report regarding our Sun Valley industrial grow appeal. As I have grown into my career, I have found my voice and understand the value I, as a woman and professional engineer, bring to every project.

During the Board of Supervisors meeting, I was very disappointed when I was berated by Rex Bohn's bullying words: "Rebecca, I really like the facial things and everything but this is my time. I listened to you scold me." This short but poignant statement reflects historic prejudice against women and how we communicate.

Women, far more than men, use paralanguage such as tone, pitch, and speaking speed to express meaning. Men use fewer of the thousands of available facial expressions than women do. After more than a year of living on Zoom, body language, including facial expressions, has become critical to how we communicate. Supervisor Bushnell interpreted my non-verbal cues accurately, when she stated, "Please, Rebecca, don't shake your head." In reference to Sun Valley's outreach to my community.

As we progress in society, let's look at our unconscious biases and respect that a strong, intelligent, and emotional woman's voice is as meaningful as one from the patriarchy.

On Collin's Return

I was heartened to see Collin Yeo's Setlist column (June 24). It is a sure sign things are getting back to normal, and he's an asset in coverage of the local live music scene.

That said, in a near 300 word preamble to the column exclaiming "I'm going to use my words for more light hearted fun," he then uses the vast majority of it in a now predictable screed against capitalism, the unfairness of it all and even a shot at Arcata, "a town that believes in justice, as long as it doesn't come with a price tag." Amigo, most everything comes with a price tag. Even in socialist countries you pay with non compliance in religion, politics, etc. Perhaps Buddhist Asceticism is in your future.

I can somewhat understand his bitterness as he also ran for Arcata City Council, which I endorsed despite my eye rolling when he gets up on the soap box. "Here goes Collin again ..." It is an unfortunate artifact of his fine entertainment writing that we are privileged to endure his anti-capitalist manifesto pretty much on a weekly basis.

So Collin, how do you feel about the bell weather New York City Mayor's race where law and order candidate Eric Adams appears to be waxing AOC's hand-picked progressive Maya Wiley? Scratch that, I don't have an hour for a bitter diatribe, and besides, the entertainment writing is much more engaging.

Battling the Booms

Eureka makes it easier to report, investigate illegal fireworks

By Iridian Casarez
iridian@northcoastjournal.com

Last Friday night, Eureka resident Jean Scheffler was awoken by several loud explosions that lit up the sky over her neighborhood. The booms were so loud they shook her windows and her dogs began to cower and shake vigorously with anxiety. Scheffler knew, especially with Fourth of July being right around the corner, they were illegal fireworks.

She and a group of other Humboldt County residents also fed up with unexpected illegal fireworks going off at all hours have been working to change the city of Eureka's municipal code on illegal fireworks. The code currently prohibits all types of fireworks in Old Town and on Woodley Island, but reverts to California's code stating no person is allowed to set off or discharge any large fireworks that explode in the air or move on the ground uncontrollably (like sky rockets, bottle rockets, roman candles, aerial shells and firecrackers) unless they have a permit. "Safe and sane" fireworks, which are approved by the California Office of the State Fire Marshall and sold through the temporary fireworks stands that crop up in advance of the Fourth, are otherwise allowed.

Within the past year, the group has attended city council meetings, met with Eureka Mayor Susan Seaman, the Eureka Police Department and Humboldt Bay Fire, all in an effort to stop illegal fireworks from sending roaring booms through their neighborhoods.

"It's a battle," Scheffler said. "We just want our peace and quiet back after the Fourth."

For this particular group, their pets and families have a hard time when loud explosions go off, so some decide to leave town to areas where fireworks aren't heard, while others choose to tranquilize their pets due to mitigate severe stress responses. Scheffler said that it's easier to plan for expected fireworks on the Fourth but it's the sudden explosions that are the most problematic and, in very rare instances, have led to tragic loss.

At the start of the New Year, people in Margie Omstead's neighborhood near Pinehill began setting off illegal fireworks. The loud booms scared her horse, causing it to run into a chain-link fence and suffer severe injuries that ultimately led to it being euthanized.

Reports of loud explosions and illegal fireworks have increased within the city of Eureka in the past couple of years, according to EPD, with complaints increasing 137 percent from 2019 to 2020.

Humboldt Bay Fire spokesperson Amy Conlin told the Journal that, although the department doesn't track data on the types of calls they respond to, she is confident it responds to at least 10 to 15 calls per year due to fireworks.

"Fireworks all around are dangerous," Conlin said. "Even legal fireworks, like sparklers, that are set off near dry grass can start a fire, or if a child is holding one, the base can get as hot as 1,800 degrees Fahrenheit, and they can burn themselves."

To help address the ongoing problem, the city of Eureka recently created an online tool to report illegal fireworks, Seaman told the Journal.

"That form was a direct result of the work Jean Scheffler's group did," the mayor said. "It was something that wasn't on our priority list until she came in and had those conversations and we were able to start those conversations and see what we could do to help."

The hardest part of responding to reports of illegal fireworks is that investigative resources are always scarce. EPD spokesperson Brittany Powell said a lot of reports come in as "heard only" and are otherwise vague.

"[These cases] are really hard to investigate," EPD Capt. Brian Stephens said. "You could set off a mortar on the street and be back in your house before your neighbors can see, and we've also been literally around the block and heard the boom and seen the flashes and gone over and nobody's there and we would never be able to find them."

So, in an effort to make investigations easier on EPD and the dispatch center, the city of Eureka's illegal fireworks online report form asks for very specific details of the incidents, like the location and address of the fireworks' source and "violator" information, including a vehicle description, if possible.

"Around the 4th of July and New Year's, our dispatch center can get inundated with calls reporting illegal fireworks," Powell said in an email. "It is our hope that this form can alleviate some of those calls and provide our officers and firefighters with additional information to locate those responsible."

After hearing the explosions in her neighborhood last Friday, Scheffler began completing EPD's online fireworks complaint form, giving her some hope.

"I'm really encouraged by the form," Scheffler says, "I was very happy that they did this because [Seaman] told me back in January that they were going to have a reporting form on the website. ... We're encouraged."

Since the online form was released June 10, EPD has received three completed firework complaints. While Powell didn't state whether the reports have made investigations easier, she did say that the completed forms provided a general vicinity of the possible sources, which is one of its goals.

"We're hoping that if people feel there's a better way to report it, we might be able to do some more triangulation and say, 'OK, we're seeing a lot of reports coming from this area, maybe we can send a patrol car and identify who's doing it,'" Seaman said.

But Scheffler and her group want to also see changes to the city's municipal code section on fireworks.

"I would really like to see a consequence attached to the code," Scheffler said, adding that it could discourage illegal fireworks from going off. "I'm not opposed to setting off fireworks on Fourth of July. But when it's not the Fourth is when it's hard."

Although there aren't any direct consequences written into the Eureka Municipal code, Stephens says anyone caught setting off any fireworks in Old Town and Woodley Island could face fines of up to $500 or up to six months in jail. In other areas of Eureka where state laws are applied, people can face a misdemeanor charge of up to one year in county jail or a $1,000 fine for setting off illegal fireworks.

There haven't been cases where EPD has arrested individuals setting off illegal fireworks, but Stephens says there have been instances of fires and severe injuries caused by illegal fireworks set off in the county. But mostly, Stephens is hopeful residents will be mindful of their neighbors and their surroundings this year.

"Our goal is compliance and quality of life for all of our citizens," Stephens says. "We understand and absolutely support the Fourth of July in all aspects, but we're in the middle of a historical drought, we live in a city compared to a rural area and we need to look after one another and ensure that everyone can enjoy the holiday. ... Stick with 'safe and sane,' keep everything out of Old Town and Woodley Island and I think we'll all have an enjoyable Fourth of July." ●

New Closures Coming to Last Chance Grade

Traversing the upper reaches of California along U.S. Highway 101 is about to become more complicated as Caltrans extends road closures to accelerate a stabilization project on a slope over the short but notorious Del Norte County section known as Last Chance Grade.

This year alone, landslides blocked the aptly named stretch south of Crescent City — which serves as a main link between the northernmost reaches of the state to points south — several times.

Starting July 6, the highway will be closed at Last Chance Grade between 8 a.m. and noon, open for three hours, then shut again from 3 to 7 p.m. Monday to Thursday. On Fridays, the highway will be closed from 8 a.m. to noon.

The new schedule, according to Caltrans, is expected to "shave months off of long closures in the area" — moving the project completion date from November to the end of August — but the work can't take place at night for a number of reasons, including worker safety.

"Even during the day, fog can have significant impacts on our work progress and worker safety. On top of that, the location of the slide also limits where we can place lights without them getting damaged by rockfall," Caltrans wrote in a Facebook post. "We are currently removing debris at the high end of the slide which can make removing material safely impossible without proper lighting and visibility. This new accelerated schedule will hopefully advance the project to a point when extensive night work could be implemented."

There aren't any simple detours. The only way around is a seven hour and 320-mile-long trip via Highway 199 to Interstate 5 to State Route 299.

Troubles along the cliffside passage named for the Last Chance Slide that came down on a wagon trail built back in 1894 are nothing new, with some 200 active landslides documented in the area.

In fact, instability almost derailed the current route's construction back in 1933, leading to talks of moving the road inland which never moved forward, mainly due to cost.

Should a catastrophic failure occur, Del Norte County alone stands to lose some $300 million to $400 million per year in economic productivity, along with an estimated 3,000 to 4,000 jobs.

But there is a glimmer of hope down an albeit long road for a solution to Last Chance Grade. Local officials announced in April that a list of alternative routes had been narrowed down to two possibilities — ranging in price from $300 million to $2 billion.

Even with that milestone reached, the environmental review process and ultimate selection of an alternative is expected to happen in 2025, with an estimated opening date of 2038 — or sooner.

So, the shore-up efforts continue.

Until the new schedule starts July 6, the section will be closed Monday through Thursday from 9 to 11 a.m., noon to 2 p.m. and from 3 to 5 p.m. On Fridays, the closures run from 9 to 11 a.m. and noon to 2 p.m.

During the holiday weekend of July 2 through July 5, 30-minute delays are projected.

"By simply 'timing it right' to arrive at Last Chance Grade slightly before and during these open windows, travel impacts can be greatly reduced as crews continue their hard work battling the elements and performing slope stabilization work," Caltrans states.

Still Wild

Prairie Creek Redwoods State Park

By Mark Larson
newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

An unexpected "staycation" benefit of this pandemic era has been getting to know local locations I hadn't spent much time visiting.

Next time you're driving in northern Humboldt County, take one of the U.S. Highway 101 bypass exits onto Newton B. Drury Scenic Parkway into Prairie Creek Redwoods State Park. Fifty miles north of Eureka, it is now one of my favorite day trips.

You don't want to bypass massive old growth redwood trees, a waterfall, a fern-lined canyon, wild Roosevelt elk, beautiful wildflowers and rhododendron blooms, more than 100 memorial redwood groves and spectacular beach rock formations. You can also find 75 miles of walking trails and two campgrounds (reservations only). And, as we discovered on a recent early June visit, you won't find a memorial stone monument honoring Save the Redwoods League founder Madison Grant that was placed in Elk Prairie in 1948 (see sidebar story for details).

Before you go, check the park's website www.parks.ca.gov for details about COVID-19 guidelines, other rules (no dogs allowed at Fern Canyon) and road conditions. As you drive U.S. Highway 101 from the south, stop first at the Redwood National Park Visitor Center south of Orick for a park trails map and the latest road conditions. (Prairie Creek Redwoods State Park is managed cooperatively by the National Park Service and the California Department of Parks and Recreation.) Coming from the north U.S. Highway 101 bypass exit, your only option for park information is driving 8 miles south to the Elk Prairie Visitor Center.

Heading north from Orick, keep your eyes open for Roosevelt elk — they could be anywhere, including the park trails and crossing the highway. This is prime habitat for what was once the last surviving herd in California. They can be especially dangerous in the late spring/summer, when the cows have calves, and in the fall, when the bulls are in rut. On one October hike, an aggressive bull elk blocked me from exiting a trail near the Elk Prairie visitor center until a park ranger got in his pickup to gently herd the bull elk out of my way.

Next recommended stop as you head north is Elk Meadow, just off U.S. Highway 101 on Davison Road; it has good parking and visibility for elk viewing. A short way down Davison Road are restrooms, picnic facilities and multiple trail options, including the relatively new Berry Glen Trail that takes you to Lady Bird Johnson Grove. I highly recommend the 3-mile

A tall waterfall coming off the bluffs at Gold Beach along the Coastal Trail north of Fern Canyon.

Trillium Falls trail loop here. Good signage takes you to its first trailhead on the right and it's a relatively short, uphill walk to visit one of the few waterfalls in the park. A big leaf maple tree backdrops the falls and the bridge across the creek. Like most of the park's trails, the rest of the trail loop features several memorial groves, lots of trillium and other wildflowers in the spring. I'm always amazed this preserved section of old-growth redwoods wasn't logged back in the day, given its proximity to the highway.

Removing a Monument to a Eugenicist Nazi Collaborator

State Parks reckons with ugly truths

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill
jennifer@northcoastjournal.com

On June 14, while shooting some of the images of Prairie Creek featured in this issue, photographer Mark Larson came across a team using an excavator to remove a massive boulder from which it pried a plaque. Victor Bjelajac, North Coast Redwoods District superintendent, was on site for the removal of the Madison Grant Forest and Elk Refuge's marker and explained the decision, later outlined in a June 28 press release from the California Department of Parks and Recreation.

Grant, a Save the Redwoods League founder who died in 1937, did not limit his activism to nature preservation, but also promoted "racist, anti-Asian, eugenicist and anti-miscegenation laws," according to the release. An interpretive sign to be installed at the site explains the connection: "Because he thought redwoods were the 'apex species' of tree, he equated saving them with preserving White supremacy." It goes on to say Grant, a "regular contributor to the Nazi movement," had a successful writing career promoting eugenics and his work contributed to laws restricting immigration and outlawing interracial marriage.

In October of last year, 212 scholars and historians signed a letter to California State Parks asking it to remove the Grant memorial. Among its authors is Paul Spickard, a professor who teaches the history of American immigration and race at the University of California at Santa Barbara and has authored and edited 20 books on the topic. He says his colleague and fellow historian David McIntosh, also of UCSB, sought out Grant's monument while rained out during a trout fishing trip to the park. Spickard and Rena Heinrich of the University of Southern California joined him in drafting the letter, and soon scholars from around the world were signing on.

District Interpretive Program Manager Marnin Robbins says plans were already in the works to address signs and place names that have "a discriminatory nature" under California's Re-examining Our Past Initiative but the letter was "an extra push." Another interpretive sign placed in Humboldt Redwoods State Park at Founders' Grove in 2020 addresses links between the Save the Redwoods League and eugenics, and disavows the racist ideology. "I think it's fair to say that [among conservationists] it was a prevailing theory, eugenics," says Robbins. The 19,000-pound boulder with the Grant plaque (which nearly tipped the excavator) was installed in 1948 in "an attempt by those who knew him to rehab his reputation" after World War II, describing him on the memorial as a "conservationist" and "anthropologist." Robbins says, "He was none of those things. He was a socialite, a wealthy individual who had some powerful friends. ... Part of the reason we have any redwoods today was because of him but he also used that influence to pass laws that were harmful to people not only here but in other countries."

Other sites are under review throughout the state and in Humboldt.

"It's part of a larger effort to build a parks system that is more inclusive and equitable," Robbins says, listing the planned partnership with the Yurok Tribe to co-manage the Stone Lagoon Visitor Center and hiring Indigenous interpreters to tell the park's history among the changes. "We're on their land, essentially."

In the press release, Yurok Tribal Heritage Preservation Officer Rosie Clayburn makes a direct connection between eugenics and harm against Native people, saying, "We applaud State Parks' decision to remove the Madison Grant Memorial. In addition to espousing racist ideologies, members of the eugenics movement destroyed numerous Native American burial sites to collect the skulls that were used to support their ridiculous and harmful claims."

Over the phone, Spickard elaborates on the views espoused by Grant — who, as a founder of the Bronx Zoo, subjected a Congolese man to display in the monkey

After the Madison Grant plaque was removed from the stone monument on June 14, it was placed in State Park District Superintendent Victor Bjelajac's vehicle for delivery to storage. The plaque reads: "Madison Grant Forest and Elk Refuge Dedicated to the Memory of Madison Grant, 1865-1957. Conservationist. Author. Anthropologist. A Founder of the Save-the-Redwoods League. This area of 1600 acres, habitat of the last surviving herd in California of Roosevelt Elk is established as a memorial by De Forest Grant, John D. Rockefeller Jr., Archer M. Huntington, New York Zoological Society, Boone and Crockett Club, National Audubon Society, American Wildlife Foundation, Save-the-Redwoods League, California State Parks Commission. 1948"

The large stone monument in memory of Madison Grant, after the plaque had been removed, awaited its move to a flatbed trailer on June 14.

house — and the influence of his 1916 book The Passing of the Great Race. Grant, he says, feared white people would be "outbred by brown skinned people ... and he was particularly troubled by Jews." His work fueled a series of immigration laws, including the 1924 Immigration Act, limiting the number of people allowed from Eastern Europe, Southern Europe and Africa, and outright banning those from Asia and the Middle East, based on his racist evaluation of their genetic stock. Until his death, Spickard says Grant was working with future war criminal Hermann Göring, sharing the eugenicist ideas that would provide foundation for the Nuremberg Race Laws, which determined who would be defined as "racially Jewish" and thus stripped of German citizenship and removed from the general population. Spickard notes, "Adolph Hitler wrote him a fanboy letter in which he referred to The Passing of the Great Race as 'my bible.'"

Spickard, McIntosh and Heinrichs came up to Humboldt for the removal ceremony, which was attended by representatives of California State Parks and National Parks services, the Yurok Tribe and the Save the Redwoods League. "It was great. There were a bunch of really smart, really great people involved," Spickard says, adding that he appreciates the work being done by the "good people" of Save the Redwoods League to grapple with the organization's history and publicly reject the racist ideals of some of its founders.

"We don't want to erase the past but we do want to put it in context. ... For 73 years, we have honored [Grant] without thinking about the main stuff he did with his life and we need to think about that," Spickard says. "I don't have a desire to spoil people's recollections of their ancestors but let's tell the whole story ... and let's be our better selves." ● road conditions and be aware the gravel road cannot accommodate trailers or vehicles more than 8 feet wide or 24 feet long) for another 6 miles to Gold Bluffs Beach and access to Fern Canyon and the campground (reservations only and no electricity, water or sewage connections for RVs). In the summer, the parking lot at Fern Canyon often fills by noon, so visit early in the day. Elk graze along the beach or near the road, so be careful.

Walking up the small creek in Fern Canyon when seasonal bridges were available.

A sign along the Gold Bluffs road warns to avoid Roosevelt elk cows with calves.

Sighting a young Barred Owl along the Ossagon Trail was a special treat on a August hike.

My wife and I greatly enjoy the photography opportunities and the 1.2-mile walk into the narrow, high-walled Fern Canyon, which was a backdrop for Jurassic Park. We wear rubber boots or river sandals as there's a good chance you'll get your feet wet in the shallow creek while avoiding the crowds or finding the perfect photo composition. Other hiking options include going north on the Coastal Trail to see a high waterfall coming off the bluffs or east to the visitor center via the James Irving or Miner's Ridge trails. I recommend a longer walk through beautiful old growth redwoods here by parking at the visitor center at Elk Prairie along the Parkway and walking the 11.6-mile loop to Fern Canyon and back via the James Irving and Miner's Ridge trails.

After entering the Newton B. Drury Scenic Parkway from the south, again watch for elk in Elk Prairie as you head north. Stop at the visitor center and restrooms (you may have to park along the Parkway and walk in, as spaces fill up). From here you have a wide range of trail choices, with the flattest being the enjoyable and scenic Prairie Creek Trail to the north. After following the creek for 1.6 miles in lush undergrowth and tall trees, I recommend turning right and crossing the Parkway to visit the Big Tree, one of many giant old growth redwoods in the park. Or you can drive north on the Parkway from the visitor center to the parking lot for a short walk to the Big Tree.

We've also enjoyed the nearby Cathedral Trees Trail, Foothill Trail and Rhododendron Trail here, along with a walk up and back on the Cal Barrel Road when it's closed to traffic in the off season. As you continue north on the Parkway, check your map for other trailheads on both sides of the road and watch for memorial grove signs.

One of our favorites any time of year is the 3.8-mile-loop Hope Creek/Ten Taypo trail about 6.2 miles north of the Newton B. Drury Scenic Parkway entrance. It features lots of trillium earlier in the spring, hundreds of Columbia lilies in June and usually fewer people.

ly used out-and-back, 4-plus-mile Ossagon Trail. We enjoy this trail through redwoods and spruce forest to the ocean beach and the Ossagon Rocks, but then puff our way back up the 800 feet of elevation gain on the way back to the car. It's the only trail in the park open to mountain bikes, and riders often loop south on the beach's Coastal Trail to Fern Canyon and back to the Elk Prairie Visitor Center.

There are 111 memorial groves located throughout the park, some with signs that are aging or broken by falling branches and trees. You'll see the Joseph and Zipporah Russ Pioneer Grove sign along the Parkway (with a local connection to Russ Park in Ferndale) and my favorite name: the Grove of Happy Memories. See a map for memorial grove locations at www www.redwoodparksconservancy.org.

Finally, a unique vehicle-free and ADA-accessible walk we enjoy is the Hike and Bike Day on Newton B. Drury Scenic Parkway the first Saturday of the month from October to May. The parkway is closed to all motorized vehicles for a chance to bicycle, skate, stroll, roll, saunter or skip with leashed pets as far as you want to the north park entrance from the visitor center through 10-miles of old growth redwoods.

Remember to always be aware of your surroundings and wildlife, such as bears, elk or mountain lions, carry a map, plenty of water and snacks, and let someone know where you plan to hike if traveling alone. Enjoy the gifts of stillness and the wildness of nature. ●

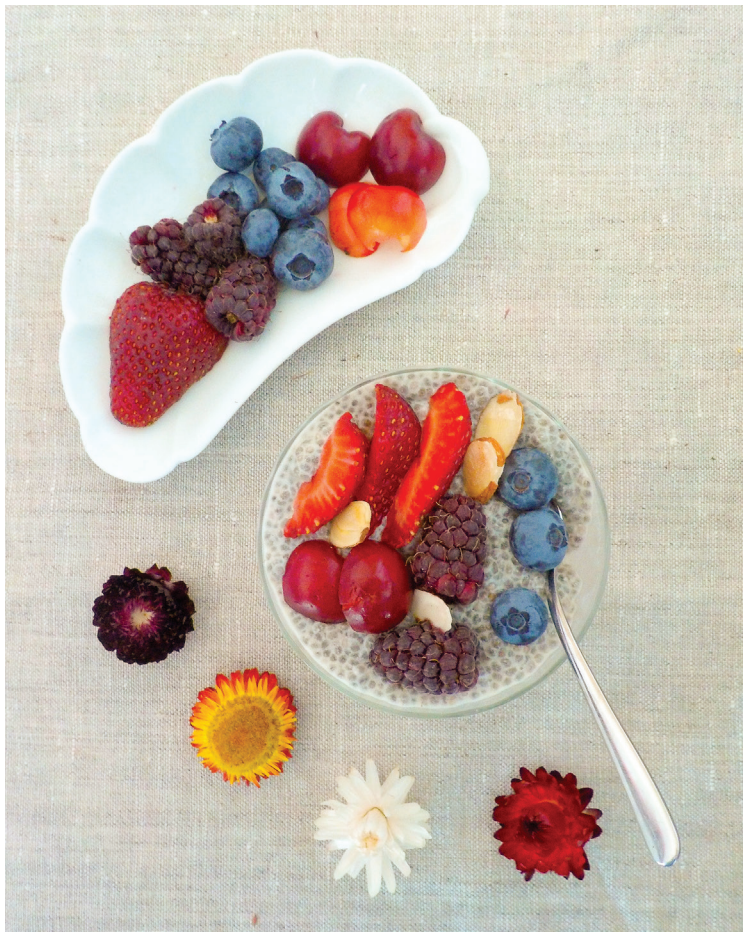
Breakfast with the Season's Fruit

Fresh cashew milk and chia pudding

By Simona Carini
onthetable@northcoastjournal.com



Crispy, creamy chia pudding for breakfast.

During the recent 15 months of isolation, outdoor physical exercise helped me manage my anxiety. I am deeply grateful that I could spend time in the forest, on the beach, on the water. My family in Italy, locked inside their apartment, provided me with a comparison that magnified my gratitude. Usually, I exercise early in the morning. Then, before I start my workday, I enjoy a nourishing breakfast, which includes chia pudding.

Chia seeds contain healthy omega-3 fatty acids, protein, fiber and calcium. When mixed with liquid, they soften and develop a mucilaginous coating that gives the resulting combination a gel texture. Add their mild flavor to the mix and the result is a nutritious food that is an ideal canvas for creative composition.

It has become a kind of ritual for me to end the day making chia pudding so I only need to remember to take it out of the refrigerator the following morning (usually before I go out, since I prefer to eat it at room temperature), then top it with the fruit of my choice and enjoy it.

You can make a simple version of chia pudding or enrich it until it becomes an fine dessert. Mine is on the simple end of the spectrum. Besides chia seeds, the pudding includes sweetener, liquid and topping. The combinations are vast and it is hard to get bored.

For sweetener, I like monk fruit, which is plant-derived and has no aftertaste. For liquid, I favor cashew milk. Originally, I purchased unsweetened, cashew-only milk, then I started experimenting with making it at home. After trying a couple of different methods, I have settled on a method from the cookbook Go Dairy Free by Alisa Fleming: I grind the raw cashews and blend them with water. Since I don't drink the cashew milk, I don't need to filter it. One advantage of making cashew milk at home is that I can make a smaller amount more often and always have it fresh.

Seasonal fruit is my topping of choice. Currently, it is 'erry chia pudding time — that's not a typo, but my way of referring to berries and cherries together. I am an equal opportunity 'erry eater; I like them all, add them to a lot of dishes and often eat them straight from the container. I get my fill at the market, then each day I make a different chia pudding, with a single fruit or a few.

While small, tender berries (like blueberries, loganberries, raspberries) can be added directly to the pudding and mixed in, other 'erries benefit from a little preparation: Slice strawberries, pit and halve or quarter cherries. Use the same idea with other fruit (peaches, kiwis, persimmons, etc.), peeling and/or cutting them into small pieces as needed.

Between exercise and work, I carve out a small sliver of time to enjoy the light sweetness, creamy texture and fruity flavor, savoring it before turning my attention to the daily to-do list.

Chia Pudding

Serves 1; multiply as needed.

Ingredients:
1 tablespoon chia seeds
2 teaspoons monk fruit sweetener or other sweetener of choice
⅛ teaspoon vanilla extract
⅓ cup unsweetened cashew milk (recipe below)
Fruit of choice (e.g., berries, cherries, peaches)
½ tablespoon sliced almonds, toasted in a dry skillet (optional)

For the cashew milk:
2 ounces raw cashews
1 ½ cups water

To make the cashew milk, finely grind the cashews in a spice grinder or small food processor. Place the ground cashews and the water in a blender and blend well. Pour into a glass jar, seal and refrigerate until ready to use.

Several hours before you plan to eat the pudding (or the night before), place the chia seeds and sweetener in a 4-ounce ramekin or serving glass. Add the vanilla extract. Shake the jar containing the cashew milk well, then pour ⅓ cup onto the chia seeds. Stir well. Let stand for 5 minutes and stir again, making sure the seeds are not clumped. Cover and refrigerate.

Take the pudding out of the refrigerator ahead of time so it's at your preferred temperature when served.

Prepare the fruit. Peel, pit and cut the fruit, as needed — small berries are fine as they are. Top the pudding with the fruit and optional sliced almonds, and serve. ●

The Race to Bring Horse Racing Back to the Fair

By Rod Kausen
trophycase@northcoastjournal.com

The Humboldt County Fair homepage says, "While there are still uncertainties as we move through 2021, plans to have a full fair including horse racing, vendors, carnival, exhibits and livestock is underway."

Come Friday, the fair is just seven weeks away with plenty of loose ends to be tied. At least now there are some funds, as the Humboldt County Supervisors approved $200,000 in budget allocations and the fair board can sign contracts for vendors and performers. A local carnival and full fair are in the air for the first time since the COVID-19 pandemic began. The livestock auction will be live again the first Sunday of the fair, Aug. 22.

Humboldt County Fair Board President Andy Titus, along with recent new board members Greg Gomes and Jack Rice, are bringing fresh energy for changes and positive long-term growth. But sometimes new ideas can be met with a lingering feeling of resentment and reluctance by more "seasoned" board members and this board of 13 members is operating without a fair director.

Eight years ago, when the fair had a large reserve, the board didn't renew then fair manager Stuart Titus's contract, which resulted in the organization settling a wrongful termination suit for $150,000 ("Tituses Get $150K in Fair Board Settlement," Jan. 9, 2016). Seven years later, it let go his replacement Richard Conway amid the COVID-19 pandemic with no money in reserves. During the fair's hiatus, the board hasn't hired a new manager.

The board did hire two people, Katherine Ziemer and Mary Ann Renner from the Humboldt County Agriculture Board, to help 15 hours a week. With such a short time to go, they've found many tasks have been neglected. Also, with no marketing budget, publicity and sponsorships have been absent and there was much to catch up on.

Among the ideas floated around are admission price increases, pricier racing blanket sponsorships and higher prices for box seats. Cutting costs by hiring local entertainment instead of out-of town spectacles is another option.

If admission is raised, it had better not be a half-ass fair. It is, in fact, literally a no ass fair, as the America Mule Racing Association is boycotting the summer fairs because the purses are too small in comparison to the thoroughbreds. The same complaint is going around the Arabian horse community.

The bottom line is horse racing is what makes the fair tick financially now and in the future. The races in Humboldt County have been close to extinction the last few years and, with the loss of racing last summer, it is a long road back. At one time, the races would fill up with Appaloosas, Quarter Horses, and mixed breed races to supplement the Thoroughbreds to create a full card of races. Then came the mules but no longer and doubtful now with the Arabians.

New board member Greg Gomes has started an online fundraising page, hoping to earmark some $10,000 for horsemen incentives.

Bringing back Quarter Horses is another possible solution. However, the California Association of Racing Fairs (CARF) has decided the Quarter Horses can only run 110 yards on our stretch. This almost unheard of for mule or quarter horse racing. Few Quarter Horses run in Northern California and the Los Alamitos trainers may not ship here to lose a purse on a quick stumble from the gate.

The Sonoma County Fair in Santa Rosa will hold its Wine Country Racing at Golden Gate Fields, farther south. Trainers who used to take their horses to Humboldt County from Santa Rosa are less likely to do so now.

As for horses coming south from Oregon, they may be deterred by lingering bad blood. In 2018 many trainers brought horses from Oregon only to find the workman's compensation insurance paperwork not filed properly (there's some dispute over whose fault that is). The horses could not run, resulting lost revenue on both sides.

Some members of the board have been courting trainers from both Oregon and Pleasanton, trying to put the past behind them. Incentives such as $250 gas cards, free shavings, barbecues, housing and the California Racing Fairs incentives that pay out-of-state trainers and owners to race here may be working. Some Oregon horses are signed on and some trainers from down south are coming for the first time.

Grants Pass Downs is pulling off a successful meet but when racing there, the fear is that many trainers will head to Emerald Downs in Washington or the newly reopened Arizona Downs in Prescott, Arizona, where they can bunk down for months of races. There's worry in Grants Pass that if the horses go to Arizona, they might not come back to Oregon for the fall meet.

The last horse race held at Ferndale was a fiasco. The starter pulled the button before the horses were ready for the final race, the Humboldt County Marathon, a Ferndale treasure. People waited in lines for hours to get a few dollars back from the waived race.

Until we see the horses here and entering races, and patrons coming through the gates, we just do not know. It is now or never. The fair board and supporters of the fair are doing their best to court the racing people to come here. The odds are mixed and the stakes are high, as we could see the end of a historic tradition.

Tough Go for Eureka King Opener

By Kenny Priest
fishing@northcoastjournal.com

Laytonville resident Jack Kuykendall landed this nice king salmon while fishing out of Shelter Cove.

For at least the past few weeks, there were all sorts of signs indicating salmon were plentiful off the coast of Eureka and Trinidad. But somehow those signs, and the salmon, all but vanished by the time the sport salmon season opened Tuesday. While the majority of boats opted for Pacific halibut, a group, including Tim Klassen of Reel Steel Sport Fishing, spent a good part of the day hunting for salmon. And what they found was pretty disappointing. According to Klassen, there were no keeper kings caught that he had heard of. The overall salmon abundance numbers weren't projected very high for our area, but there should have been at least a handful caught.

But it wasn't meant to be. At least not yet. For all we know the fish could be out in deeper water, or they could still be making their way here. Shelter Cove had a decent opener, so that's encouraging. Until the kings arrive, rockfish will suffice.

Pacific Halibut closes June 30

The California Department of Fish and Wildlife announced Tuesday that the recreational Pacific halibut fishery will close Wednesday, June 30, at 11:59 p.m. for the remainder of 2021. Based on the latest catch projections, CDFW expects the 2021 California recreational quota of 39,260 net pounds will be exceeded unless the fishery is closed. Similar to the hot Pacific halibut bite observed in 2020, the 2021 season has proven to be very successful. During the second half of June, CDFW field staff recorded a very high number of Pacific halibut being caught. Visit www.wildlife.ca.gov/News/recreational-pacific-halibut-fishery-to-close-june-30-for-rest-of-the-year# for more information.

Weekend marine forecast

Ocean conditions look fishable through the weekend. As of Tuesday afternoon, Friday's forecast is calling for north winds at 5 to 10 knots and waves northwest 6 feet at nine seconds. Saturday's forecast is calling for northwest winds at 5 to 10 knots and waves northwest 4 feet at nine seconds. The winds will be the same on Sunday, with waves northwest 5 feet at eight seconds. These conditions can and will change by the weekend. For an up-to-date weather forecast, visit www.weather.gov/eureka/ or www.windy.com. The Oceans:

Eureka

The salmon fishing was tough for the sport boats that gave it a whirl on Tuesday's opener. Some undersized kings and a couple silvers were all the fleet could muster. The majority of the boats opted to fish Pacific halibut and leave the salmon for later. A wise move as it turns out. While the boats were on the water, it was announced that the season would be closing after Wednesday, following a full quota. Hopefully the salmon bite will pick up, otherwise it's going to be rockfish from here on out.

Trinidad

The salmon opener didn't produce much, but the rock fishing is still outstanding. Curt Wilson of Wind Rose Charters, along with the other charters, has yet to come back to port shy of limits. "There's just a lot of fish between the Head and Patrick's Point this year," said Wilson. "It's been pretty easy to get 10 rockfish per person. The crabbing is still good, we're sending clients home with limits each day."

Shelter Cove

The sport salmon opener was decent, according to Jake Mitchell of Sea Hawk Sport Fishing. "There were probably over 50 kings caught by the 35 or so boats on the water," said Mitchell. "We opted to put some rockfish on the boat first before salmon. We ended up with only three kings, but a lot of boats did better. Overall, the rock fishing has been great with limits of nice quality fish every day. The lings continue to be a little more stubborn but the grade is good and we got limits all but one day."

Crescent City

"Sport salmon season opened Tuesday and there were a handful of salmon caught, including some bigger ones," said Britt Carson of Crescent City's Englund Marine. "The rockfish bite remains solid, with limits reported by just about everyone. The California halibut have finally shown up with quite a few being caught daily off of South Beach by boats and kayaks trolling anchovies. Last week's minus tides produced excellent clamming conditions. Anglers reported limits of razors, and some bigger ones are starting to show." ●

Make Fun, Not Fire

By Collin Yeo
music@northcoastjournal.com

I'm settling back into the swing of things here at the Setlist. It was nice getting feedback from some of you about the return of this little column. Even nicer was snagging some free drinks as a result of my bartender shout-out last week. Free booze is truly the Olympian ambrosia for a gadabout town. This week's edition still has a sparseness that reflects the current live music output so I'm just focusing on the holiday weekend. But don't fear: These are all excellent entries for your consideration and more are coming down the pipeline very soon. Meanwhile, I encourage all of you to make it through the week the best way possible, by having fun and looking out for each other, the two cardinal virtues of the New Age. Try not to burn the place down if you can help it.

Be seeing you.

Friday

I have been given the absolute word from the very talented singer/guitarist Rah'kiv from Icarus and Suns that his group will be joining up with a couple more bright young acts to grace the stage at the Siren's Song at 9 p.m. ($5-$10 sliding scale). The acts in question are psychedelians Pills and Thrills and the country-tinged, punk-adjacent grab bag Over Yonder, both of whom I can heartily vouch for. If you are looking for a fun night out to remind you such joys are once again possible, this is my pick. I took the plunge a week ago and saw Conman Bolo at this venue and oh my, was it good to be back in the crowd.

Saturday

Arts Alive! returns once again to the streets of Old Town Eureka, and with it come diversions and delights. I have my eye on one affair in particular: A skateboard art fundraiser outside of the Madrone Taphouse, where skate ramps will be set up and records will be spun from 5 to 8 p.m. by the fantastic DJ Goldylocks. And the best part is that the proceeds go toward providing skate gear and helmets to at-risk youth, courtesy of CASA and Big Brother/Big Sister. No cost but what you throw at the auction.

Sunday (The Fourth of July)

Antonio Gramsci once wrote, "The crisis consists precisely in the fact that the old is dying and the new cannot be born. In this interregnum a great variety of morbid symptoms appear." Now, seeing as he was writing from one of Mussolini's prisons, I highly doubt that he was talking about our fireworks-loving freedom holiday here in the U.S.A., but the point still stands. As a culture, we tend to have a hysterical obsession with the past that forces us to dream of a heavenly era that never really existed and are thus not prepared for the present or the future. And presently (and for the foreseeable future) fireworks and our brave new wildfire season shouldn't mix. Pretending otherwise is morbid and unhealthy. Plus our pets, another of our beloved American institutions, hate those loud things. My two cents.

If you are looking for some wholesome Fourth of July fun down by the river that will hurt nobody, I highly recommend that you check out the folk rock songs of Colorado by-way-of Nashville duo You Knew Me When at the Mad River Brewery at 6 p.m. (free). Perfect vibes for a summer night. ●

Collin Yeo (he/him) thinks T.S. Eliot might have been on to something when he wrote, "The whole earth is our hospital/ endowed by the ruined millionaire." Only "hospital" should be replaced with "morgue" and, with the forces of inflation considered, the last word should be "billionaire." He lives in Arcata.

Good on Paper

Funny Girls

Good on Paper

REVIEWS

GOOD ON PAPER. I usually don't like it when comedians make movies because they're seldom as funny as their stand-up routines. I get that they want to break out of the boxes we have put them in (or they have put themselves in) but it's never the same. Still, Iliza Shleslinger is by far one of my favorite stand-up comedians so when I saw she had put out a movie with stand-up royalty Margaret Cho (Hysterical, 2021), I eagerly pressed play.

Iliza Shleslinger stars as stand-up comedian Andrea Singer, who accidentally meets the "perfect guy." Along with her alarm bells, Andrea ignores warnings from her friend Margot (played by the forever wonderful Cho), who is convinced he's not all sunshine and roses. Is she right? So begins their investigation.

Directed by Kimmy Gatewood, whose directorial resume includes episodes of Girls5eva and Crazy Ex-Girlfriend, and written by Shlesinger, this gal-pal romp is fast-paced, entertaining and slightly clever. I say slightly because Shlesinger seems to be holding back her smarts as if she's trying to make the movie enjoyable for everyone and not go over people's heads, as she sometimes does. Still, Shlesinger delivers with the animated storytelling that sucks you right in during her stand-up.

Like so many Netflix productions, Good on Paper is lightly narrated — it's done so much, it leaves a bad taste in my mouth. It's as if directors think the audience's attention span is so short they have to be talked to the whole time, lest they lose interest. But the comedy duo at the center of the film make it doable, delivering laughs with Ryan Hansen (Fantasy Island, 2020), a guy who looks a lot like the Bradley Cooper in the Hangover movies.

But this is about Shlesinger and Cho, whose comedic pairing is perfect. Both are lightly raunchy (or heavily, depending on how you were raised) with a feminist point of view. They hold nothing back when attacking men (verbally) and will make you laugh until you cry. Cho is one of the original female comedians doing her own thing fearlessly, not afraid others may think her a vulgar, outspoken woman, and Shlesinger is continuing that tradition, so no wonder they made a movie together. Kudos.

Despite all the funny moments, Good on Paper did have the usual rom-com lull with a roll-your-eyes moment in its second half. Most movies in the genre have that moment within the first 30 minutes, though, and the lull was over quickly and I found myself getting emotionally involved again.

Voice-overs aside, one good thing I will say about Netflix movies is they keep smaller-profile actors employed. The great show GLOW, which was based off the Gorgeous Ladies of Wrestling in the '80s and lasted for a few seasons, has sadly run its course. One of my favorite characters was Carmen, the big Samoan wrestler played by Britney Young. It was a nice surprise to see her in this movie, scoring a small role with a mainstream comedian is huge, as women who look like her (large and of color) are often forgotten and tossed to the side once they no longer serve their purpose as a stock character.

Good on Paper confirms what we knew all along: Shlesinger is funny a.f. And it delivers for those of us who miss seeing good female comics and can stomach a little man bashing. I also recommend checking out Shlesinger's four stand-up specials on Netflix and adding Cho's documentary about female comics, Hysterical, to your Hulu/FX queue. It gives nonstop laughter and real insight into how it is for women in the comedy industry. No lulls. R. 92M. NETFLIX. ●

Live Another Day

Tulip and Jesse are prisoners in separate cells. Every morning, a guard enters first Tulip's, then Jesse's cell, tossing a coin in each. After seeing the outcome of the toss in her cell, Tulip has to guess what the toss in Jesse's cell will show. Then the guard goes to Jesse's cell, tossing the coin, after which Jesse guesses what was the outcome of Tulip's toss. If at least one of their guesses is correct, they live another day — otherwise they both die. Before being locked up, they were able to briefly confer. How are they able to avoid execution indefinitely?

Free Will Astrology

Week of July 1, 2021

By Rob Brezsny
freewillastrology@freewillastrology.com

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Columnist Linda Weltner says that there's a dual purpose to cleaning your home, rearranging the furniture, adding new art to the walls, and doting on your potted plants. Taking good care of your environment is a primary way of taking good care of yourself. She writes, "The home upon which we have lavished so much attention is the embodiment of our own self love." I invite you to make that your inspirational meditation for the next two weeks.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): "For peace of mind, I will lie about any thing at any time," said author Amy Hempel. Hmmmm. I'm the opposite. To cultivate peace of mind, I try to speak and live the truth as much as I can. Lying makes me nervous. It also seems to make me dumber. It forces me to keep close track of my fibs so I can be sure to stick to my same deceitful story when the subject comes up later. What about you, Taurus? For your peace of mind, do you prefer to rely on dishonesty or honesty? I'm hoping that for the next four weeks, you will favor the latter. Cultivating judicious candor will heal you and boost your intelligence.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): In her essay about education, "Don't Overthink It," philosopher Agnes Callard reminds us, "No matter how much we increase our investment at the front end—perfecting our minds with thinking classes, long ruminations, novel-reading, and moral algebra—we cannot spare ourselves the agony of learning by doing." That will be a key theme for you in the next four weeks, dear Gemini. You will need to make abundant use of empiricism: pursuing knowledge through direct experience, using your powers of observation and a willingness to experiment.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche said that when our rational minds are working at their best, they inspire us to cultivate our most interesting and enlivening passions. They also de-emphasize and suppress any energy-draining passions that might have a hold on us. I'm hoping you will take full advantage of this in the coming weeks, Cancerian. You will generate good fortune and sweet breakthroughs as you highlight desires that uplift you and downgrade desires that diminish you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Leo author Wendell Berry suggests, "It may be that when we no longer know what to do, we have come to our real work, and when we no longer know which way to go, we have begun our real journey." Although there's wisdom in that formulation, I don't think it's true a majority of the time. Far more often we are fed by the strong, clear intuitions that emerge from our secret depths—from the sacred gut feelings that give us accurate guidance about what to do and where to go. But I do suspect that right now may be one of those phases when Berry's notion is true for you, Leo. What do you think?

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): In 1750, more than 250 years after Columbus first visited the New World, Native Americans were still a majority of the continent's population. But between 1776 and now, the United States government stole 1.5 billion acres of land from its original owners—25 times the size of the United Kingdom. Here's another sad fact: Between 1778 and 1871, America's federal administrations signed over 500 treaties with indigenous tribes—and broke every one of them. The possibility that these sins will eventually be remedied is very small. I bring them up only to serve as possible metaphors for your personal life. Is there anything you have unfairly gained from others? Is there anything others have unfairly gained from you? The next six months will be prime time to seek atonement and correction.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Libran Zen teacher Thich Nhat Hanh advises you and me and everyone else to "seek the spiritual in every ordinary thing that you do every day." You have to work at it a bit, he says; you must have it as your firm intention. But it's not really hard to do. "Sweeping the floor, watering the vegetables, and washing the dishes become holy and sacred if mindfulness is there," he adds. I think you Libras will have a special knack for this fun activity in the coming weeks. (Thich Nhat Hanh wrote a series of "Mindfulness Essentials" books that includes How to Eat, How to Walk, How to Relax, and How to Connect. I invite you to come up with your own such instructions.)

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): My unexpected interpretation of the current astrological omens suggests that you will be wise to go naked as much as possible in the coming weeks. Being skyclad, as the pagans say, will be healing for you. You will awaken dormant feelings that will help you see the world with enhanced understanding. The love that you experience for yourself will soften one of your hard edges, and increase your appreciation for all the magic that your life is blessed with. One important caveat: Of course, don't impose your nakedness on anyone who doesn't want to witness it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): If you analyzed the best-selling songs as measured by Billboard magazine, you'd think we were in the midst of a dangerous decline in population. The vast majority of those popular tunes feature lyrics with reproductive themes. It's as if there's some abject fear that humans aren't going to make enough babies, and need to be constantly cajoled and incited to engage in love-making. But I don't think you Sagittarians, whatever your sexual preference, will need any of that nagging in the coming days. Your Eros Quotient should be higher than it has been in a while.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Pulitzer Prize-winning author Donna Tartt, born under the sign of Capricorn, writes, "Beauty is rarely soft or consolatory. Quite the contrary. Genuine beauty is always quite alarming." In my view, that's an unwarranted generalization. It may sometimes be true, but is often not. Genuine beauty may also be elegant, lyrical, inspiring, healing, and ennobling. Having said that, I will speculate that the beauty you encounter in the near future may indeed be disruptive or jolting, but mostly because it has the potential to remind you of what you're missing—and motivate you to go after what you've been missing.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): On July 21, 1969, Aquarian astronaut Buzz Aldrin was the second human to walk on the moon. It happened during a spectacular astrological aspect, when transiting Jupiter and Uranus in Libra were trine to Aldrin's natal Sun in Aquarius. But after this heroic event, following his return to earth, he found it hard to get his bearings again. He took a job as a car salesman, but had no talent for it. In six months, he didn't sell a single car. Later, however, he found satisfaction as an advocate for space exploration, and he developed technology to make future trips to Mars more efficient. I hope that if you are now involved in any activity that resembles Aldrin's stint as a car salesman—that is, a task you're not skilled at and don't like—you will spend the coming weeks making plans to escape to more engaging pursuits.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Astronomers say the Big Bang birthed the universe 13.8 billion years ago. But a star 190 light years away from Earth contradicts that theory. Its age seems to be 14.5 billion years, older than the universe itself. Its scientific name is HD 140283, but it's informally referred to as Methuselah, named after the Biblical character who lived till age 969. Sometimes, like now, you remind me of that star. You seem to be an impossibly old soul—like you've been around so many thousands of lifetimes that, you, too, predate the Big Bang. But guess what: It's time to take a break from that aspect of your destiny. In the next two weeks, you have cosmic permission to explore the mysteries of playful innocence. Be young and blithe and curious. Treasure your inner child. ●

Live Another Day The outcome of the two tosses will either be the same or different, so they decided on a simple strategy: Tulip will always predict the same (e.g. she sees a head and predicts Jesse will see a head) while Jesse will always say the opposite (e.g. he sees a head and guesses Tulip saw a tail). One of their guesses will always be correct.
